CONTACT: LnLmttHUp

Comment Codes: 257, 258

The National Student Loan Data System (NSLDS) of the U.S. Department of Education has informed us, through your FAFSA, that their records indicate your total loan indebtedness is approaching the total maximum (called an aggregate loan limit) which a student can borrow. This may affect your ability to receive Federal Financial Aid, so we are reminding you that this limit is approaching to help you plan.

This may not affect your eligibility for Financial Aid for the current academic year, but will affect federal loan borrowing in future years.
 THIS IS AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

What should I do?

1	Confirm the accuracy of your FAFSA Loan data.	Go to https://studentaid.gov/h/manage-loans and log in with your FSA ID. There, you will be able to review your federal student loan history. If you see inaccuracies, contact the Loan Servicer using the contact Information available within the studentaid.gov website. If the Student Financial Planning Office can be of any help, please feel free to contact us.

Over your college career, over all of the institutions at which you attend and borrowed federal student loans, the maximum you can have outstanding. When this limit is reached, you cannot borrow any more, unless you pay down your principal balance. If this limit is exceeded, you become ineligible for other forms of federal financial aid.
